FACING RACISM IN EDUCATION

— A new reprint book from the Harvard Educational Review

Building on the Harvard Educational Review's acclaimed August 1988 Special Issue, the Editors have collected into one volume the Review's most influential articles concerning the continuous significance of race and racism in education. Contributions range from Jacquelyn Mitchell's 1982 article, "Reflections of a Black Social Scientist," to Christine Sleeter and Carl Grant's "Analysis of Multicultural Education" (November 1987), to the best of the August 1988 Special Issue.

The discussion is led by members of those groups that historically have been the targets of racism in the United States: Asian Americans, Blacks, Latinos, and Native Americans. In this latest book in the HER Reprint Series, writers and scholars provide thorough and insightful examinations of the role of race and racism in education today.

The richness of perspectives on the experiences of people of color in American education is expressed in the articles, poetry, and personal accounts by teachers and high school and college students in Facing Racism in Education. Authors include:
